Washington, May 23. A more beautiful day for the purposes of the grand military review could not have been asked than this has been. The recent heavy rains had cooled and purified the atmosphere and cleaned the streets. The sun shone brightly but nereifally throughout the day, and all rature was happy. At daylight the streets were already throng id will pedestrians seeking favorable positions to will ness the military pageant, and at 8 o'c'osk every available spot along the ronte was taken up by the arrived spectators. Windows and houseteps were througed, impromptu stands were erected on the sidewalks, and the intersections of the streets were crowded. Guards were stationed along the outer line of the pavements to prevent any encroachment upon the streets which, from embistone to curbatone, were completely occupied by the military procession.

In the vicinity of the White House the seeme was brilliant and gay in the extreme, Here were assembled upon and near the stands the clite of the country. At twenty-five minntes

The editor of the New York Times proeser to have, and no doubt has, some general snowledge of the character of the newly-invented material mentioned by Senator O.thum of Texas, in his letter to Jeff Davis, as what might be need by secret emissaries to burn the great cities and t was of the North and all the Federal shipping upon the Atlantic and the Ohio and Miselssippi riv rs and to spread devaation and consternation through the country. The plan was to send agents to scatter a com bustible composition, a kind of powder, ali through Northern hotels and other buildings in the Northern cities and on the decks or in the cabins of Northern and Western ship, ing. The position was said to be something that would not ignite for some time, but finally reak out in fiames in hundreds of places, li the rebel capital, and who gave countenance to ambilion. scattered in so many, bid defiance to all possi a plot for having all the great cities of the Unit-ble saving efforts, and involve property and life in universal destruction. This was the flendish project that was presented to Jeff Davis by Senators Oldham and Johnson in an interview they had with him Davis suggested some things that he though night be obstacles in the way of its execution. Oldham's letter to him, which we have published, was designed to show him that, notwithstanding his suggestion of difficulties, the plot was entirely practicable. Davis referred that letter to Benjamin, his Secretary of State, whom he instructed to call upon the gentleman who had the secret of the mysterious composition and ascertain whether the difficulties, previously experienced, had been or could be overme. From this it is evident that configration plots had been tried by the rebel authorities before. Now let the rebele and their sympathiners look at Jeff Davis and the other leading spirits of the late rebellion in the light of the broad glare that this exposition throws the twin horror of the yellow-fever plot of Blackburn & Co. Who that got up or promosed either is too good to do any deed that man or devil could suggest? Who that got up or promoted either is fit to fill a place in God's universe this side of the infernal plt?

To such an extent was this scheme of pillage carried that it became unbearable, and prising fellow-citizen, Mr. James W. S okes, has just obtained from the Legislature of Kentucky ish the robbers. A court-martial was organized, and the criminals arraigned before it and this city, with a capital of one hundred and fifty neand dollars, and the privilege of increasing and sentenced to be hnng. The sentence was carried into immediate execution. It is stated it to five hundred thousand. This is a move ment in the right direction, and one which we that this summary mode of proceeding had a bail as the harbinger of a new era of growth and prosperity for the city of Louisville. It will couragement which its importance demands at the hands of our solid citizens. It has already n responded to, we understand, in a very liberal and handsome manner, and there can scarcely be a doubt as to its complete and brilliant sucess. There should not be a moment lost in push. ing the enterprise ahead with the utmost energy. There are ample means for this purpose lying is not bounded by the limits of Kentucky alone; but, overleaping these, stretches away almost The vast importance of manufactures to the

Shall we let the propiti us moment pass away mproved, and thus m's the golden opportu nity of placing Louisville upon the high road reac? We are not using words at random when we say that this city is now in the very shall act with energy and sagacity, with a demined and enlightened liberality, in developing her resources and calling to their aid the means and facilities within their control to promote her pr sperity and enlarge her borders, or otherwise, so will will Louisville become a great emporium in the West, a great mart for manufactures, trade. erce, a seat of the arts and sciences. of taste and refinement, a nursery of learning, tionary, a sort of sleepy hollow, dwarfed, in nparison with her sister cities of Cincinnati, St. Louis, etc., to the dimensions of a mere vil lage. Among the most potent means of growth the facilities or may command them for carryeat variety. We have exhanstless on utities coal, and the steam engine is ready to do our bidding. Work does not weary it, or heat or cold interfere with its operations. We can obmines will afford as all the crude materials we | The thief had an examination before the City re, ire. We have a mild, genial, healthy cliite, pavigable streums, and an immense agricultural region to back us, to which we have easy acress by water or rail or both, and soon shall have to much greater extent. Labor will come for the asking, and skilled labor at that, tate of Kentucky immigrants, mechanics, artiof the Northeast and from Europe, will pour in pation. They will no longer shun us. They May le be dealt with according to his deserts. will prefer our beaufil climate to a more rig-

and as fast as we need it. The war has pretty well exhausted the great curtry to the south of us of manufactures. The demand the efore, must soon be great and pressing. If they are found here, won't the sopie of the South buy of us instead of going on to Cincin ati, Pittsburg, Philadelphia, and Boeton for t em? If they can purchase articles as good, and for the same price here, as to the northeast of us, will they go to the expense and trouble of visiting the more distant markets? B purchasing of us they will save me, travelling expenses and freight. This will be self-evident to all.

It follows therefore that if we can supply the people of the Southwest with the manufactures they will require they will purchase of us inste ad of going further for them. To meet the demand, we must have a variety of manufactures. If customers are compelled to go to Cincinnati or eleewhere tor some articles, they will be very likely to buy all others they need, and thus we shall lose all by not having a variety. We need, and we must have and have speedily, is we intend to enter the lists in this grand industrial race, manufactories of every description; furrita e, etoves. shoes, bats, clothing, agricultura implements, carriages, barne- es starch, paper, soap, railroad cars, locomotives, steam-engines etc.,etc., including as we progress, both the useful and the ornam utal We have the elements of the ernde materials of them all, and we can draw them out and apprograte them if we have the requisite energy and duly appreciate the vital necessity of it We are entering a rew order of things. We vant new measures and a more comprehensive tem, a larger spirit, a more manly vigor, a more determined application of all the agencice of progress within our control, a more thorevacceration of our means.

We are amoved beyond expression by persons who, observing a nan c similar to their wn in the police proceedings, want a statement made that the party mentioned was not same, of so-and-so. People should recollect that names, especially the Joneses, Smithand Browns, my sometimes be duplic ted, and they should not consider it their duty to keep the name of the whole family pure and spotiers. The namerous calls we receive in retion to this matter are particularly annoying. The last correction that we are solicited to make is of a paragraph in the police report of

Tuesday, which reads as follows:

We are asked to state that the Dr. W. C. Falne mentioned is not the Faine so well known to a large number of our citizens. The request is nseless. It is entirely unnecessary to make such having been arraigned before the Police Court. If the English language was properly underod we would never have been troubled with this matter. Everybody should know that alias means otherwise, and, when used in connection with another name in court, we understand that the last was simply assumed by the first. The language of Tuesday's report is too plain admit of a doubtful construction: "Alf. Benton, aliae Dr. W. C. Faine, alias Miller," &c. We trust that we have made ourselves nn-| Sept | deretood on this point.

PARTEIAN SENSATIONS.-It is not creditable says the Brooklyn Union, to the dencency, not to say morality, of the French capital that the most exciting social sensation with which it has been stirred for months is the appearance of a ree singer of slang conge in the salous of the fashionable. It is known whence she came, but no one knows by whom or by what she was ought. Her name is Mademoiselle Theresa. for, with that ead tendency of such women to ift loose from the world, she owns no more definite name. She used to be a singer in the cafes of the workmen and the students. She is not beautiful: she is not witty; she does not eing well; she has no winning ways; she is simply bold, and freed from all restraint of modesty propriety. Yet, she is received in the "best" society. Dear old M. Guizot, too good and pure for the tainted atmosphere he has to breathe, took his granddaughters from her presence when her songs-of the character which Col. Newcome took Clive from the "back kitchen" to avoid-broke on his ears. But Duchesses her. Her songs-says a correspondent of the

So (the correspondent goes on to say) the searce heart of Paris faellon has been quite touched by Mes Theresa. She sits in the gorgeous salima, amid crowds of viles new as her own fame, and she hears her name on all lips. lap She has pn hed her memoir. E erv ce obrity in Paris has his, her, or its memoir. A literary man of distinction is said to have composed the work for her, and the story goes that M. de Lamartine had the honor of being the very first to buy a copy. Be and by, no doubt, Edmond About will have her in a roman e as moral and ed ving as his "Maile."

Perhaps the vianier Dumas will blend emet entiment and de "ons c'ul ism in a tale so be told of her. Sterr Enguse Pelletan will grow freshly inc. guant because of her, and will pen new and more fu in in invectives againt he society of the new Baylon in van. errate German poet, a w. o' servee: H ine's drams and trag dies were the first win all of lis joet al imagination. On y twent -three s o'd when be wrote them, h was then newn as a young lyric poet, and a dreamer in whom passion had alr dy begun to be an in olerable suffering, either ill-concealed by b giving him no tru e. Germany was, therefore, taken by surpri e, and w ndered, as the world has wondered ev since, at so m . 'a audacity, so much fierce and reckless independ nee, and such a ready cour ge to carry his c lor unfuried to the wind of every pas ing opp on in so vourg a man.

Yet the charm of Heine's wrigings is irresist. ible. They are so genuine, so simple, so truthful, frank, and open hearted, and moods, ke the unguarded cap iciousness of a child. He style is unique in its air lightness, and in that exquisite made movement we call grace. Now strong, imposed ned, and clo u nt with the ardor of a heart aroused f m its depths, then suddenly falling down to the softest flate-like notes of suavity, till the expression dies away tears. For Heine lives in Iuli in all he writes We find him at every turn of the page, loving and suffering, with his unparalieled mobility of nature, his rure qualities, his many vices; the man and the artist, such as nature feshioned in one of her most daring moods. Heine has no other hero but himself When he takes us to the voluptuous, sun-embrewned Spain, or we follow him under the chilly gray sky of Scotland, lingering in Italy, or exiled in Paris, it is veils to our gaze, and which we contemplate a the stage upon which are first enacted the tragical fellies of his life. He tells us himself: have yearned for a pure ideal human love, and f d nothing but bitter hatred; so I sighed

That very confession of profound diagopointment and of mournful sadness draws us o close to Heine, and at once creates between him and us a fast follow-feeling of sympathy His exceptional nature must remain above reach of our small conventional foot measure He ecorned restraints. Impulse was the only law he recognized, and pleasure the only divin ity he worshipped; but we should remember that strong lights project strong shad w ; besides we may admire the artist, if not the man in words that make one of the most original It is mos. Iv as a lyvic poet that Heine has won an enduring place in the heart of the people. All his poems are songs, inexpressibly sweet and ead. Some have about them the plactiff int; others, on the contrary, sound like the wild wall of a storm breaking on desplate shores, with not even the flitting vision of a solitary sea bird. But all alike are marked with the same vivid imaginaices, lightness of touch, and fantastic bumor. No man ever wrote like Heine. Too lectual effort, he is so varied and versatile, so rapid in his flights from thought to sensation, and from criticism to pathetic tenderness, that his genies draws upon all the forces of our nature, and awakens to the full all its sensibilities. His precision of touch is remarkable. Criticlem with him is an intuition which guides him unerringly in his sketches of character, or his estimate of pictures and books. Unfinchingly independent of p blic opinion, he cared not for the frown of t e malcontents who carrounded him. Literature and art richly opened their treasures to m; we know how delicary he misself the malcontent who carrounded but the form the first treasures to m; we know how delicary he misself the misself

The contition of the men, whose mental and bodily powers are thus strained on the last day of the week for the religious performances of the first day does not seem to command the consideration or sympathy of these puritan divines. There is a vast amount of fonation prevalent on this question of Sabbath observance. Do these ministers invariably partance of cold dimens and other cold meals every Sanday during the year? Do they invariably refuse to allow their female domestics to perform service work, however sight, on the Lord's can? Trey who make such sacrifices in the came of religion may be justified to some extent in childing their weaker mighbors, but the number of such extreme purists is, we essect, only small.
